

Environment

---

Adjust font size: + -

August 25, 2009

Green real estate classes in September

KIRKLAND — The Sustainability Foundation, a nonprofit group in Washington, is teaching a series of green real estate classes in September. Classes will focus on topics including green products and materials and selling green homes.

The foundation said it has received a surge of requests for green real estate classes in the past month due to recent news highlighting energy rebates, federal tax credits and other incentives. Clients, the foundation says, are asking more in depth questions relative to green efficiencies. Because of this, the foundation is hosting three classes next month.

On Sept. 8, it will host a class on green products and materials. On Sept. 19 it will host a National Association of Realtors Green Designation class. On Sept. 24 it will host a class on selling green homes. The first class will be at Keller Williams' Bellevue offices. The other two will be at the Seattle King County Association of Realtors in Bellevue. For more information, visit www.sustainabilityfoundation.com.

© Seattle Daily Journal and djc.com.